To
RICHARD MOTT JONES, L. L. D.

whose untiring efforts have brought Penn Charter to a position of pre-eminence in the scholastic world, this volume, the book of the class of Nineteen Hundred and Seven, is respectfully inscribed.

Foreword

As you turn these pages, be not too harsh in your criticisms. This volume represents our ideal of a class book in but small degree. An account of the difficulties encountered in getting out a book such as this, especially after the close of school, would indeed be heart-rending. We have resolved to make no excuses, rather to hope that the book, though mute, will be eloquent.

In one respect our fondest hopes have been realized, even surpassed. The wealth of fine drawings to be found herein is due solely to the efforts of a member of our class, who has assisted more than any one else to produce this volume. To Crothers the editors, speaking for the class as well, extend their hearty thanks.

If this volume, at some future time when our hair has turned gray or disappeared entirely, shall call to mind long-forgotten scenes, with their numerous associations, so dear in boyhood, yet dearer in later life—then will it become a thing of true worth, a book which fulfills its purpose.

In Memoriam

CLARENCE H. ULRICH, JR.

Died February 22nd, 1907

It is with the deepest sorrow that we record the death of one who, if he had been spared, would have gone forth with us, a member of the Class of 1907. His death, the result of a severe attack of typhoid fever in the autumn of 1906, came as a great shock to the entire school, but one especially felt by those to whom he had ever been a beloved class-mate.

History of the Class of 1907

WILLIAM LEVENGOOD HAUPT

"Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us" to portray in language suitable to its achievements, the illustrious history of the Class of 1907. However, we beg you, kind reader, not to judge too harshly our career, but to excuse our faults and to look favorably upon our triumphs and victories.

Nine fleeting years have rolled by since '07 first began its career. In those days, we, as a class, received our instructions with childlike simplicity, and learned our A, B, C's in Latin under Miss Braley. Little did we then know that we were soon to become expert in the handling of ponies. For several years our class life was unbroken and uneventful, save for additions of new fellows to the class. Each returning autumn found us back in our old places among our chums, ready for our next year's study and round of athletics and sport.

At last, with hard work, we reached our Prima year. We seemed to be getting into deeper water, and alas! we soon found it out. However, we braced up and conquered our dreaded foes, Latin and Greek. For some few of us, mathematics almost proved to be our Waterloo. But the "di immortales" had at length decided to be on our side, and allowed us to entertain some hope of gaining that priceless parchment known as a Graduation Diploma. But whither is my scrawling pen wandering?

The next fall saw the Class of 1907, fifty-three strong, entering upon the last lap of its long race—the Upper Prima year. Many were the good times of this checkered year. How we used to rush at gym period to get downstairs, eager to do whatever stunts Mr. Porter wanted us to do—except dumb-bells! What times we had at recess with a certain short, jolly and buxom fellow called Bill! But how we did dread to see Wednesday roll around, especially a clear one! However, "if our hypothesis be correct" (Mr. Robbins), the fellows who sat near or next to that certain Bill, seldom found time to drowse or to lament this great waste (?) of time.

Now, it is entirely fitting and proper, and becomes the historian to relate, not spasmodically, inebriously, or frenziedly, but coolly and calmly, some facts concerning the importance and prestige of the Class of 1907. For the last few years, '07 could boast of its prowess in different fields of activity, from rough-housing in the classroom to fine work on the baseball diamond or football gridiron. Who could excel Campbell in these? As for those who desired to indulge in flights of oratory, they had only to hunt up Mr. Strong. Who of us is not acquainted with the oratorical abilities of Bellak and Megary? In literary pursuits we were not found lacking. This year's entire debating team and three of the Magazine Staff were members of the Class of 1907. The dramatic skill of the Class was evidenced by the number and ability of our fellows who have taken part in the Literary Society productions. How could the Musical Clubs have existed without the large quota from '07, especially Jeff Clark and Marie Fallon? On gridiron, track, crease and diamond, the Class of 1907 has never failed to do its share in upholding the standard and name of old Penn Charter. We can claim our full share of glory in the defeat of Central High's previously unconquered football team. In many other ways it soon became evident that the Class of 1907 was in nowise "behind the procession." All remarkable occurrences we leave for individual members to whisper into the ears of their "most devoted." We do this because we wish to prove ourselves honest (as we are), and if the historian were to tell you some true things, you might doubt them, since all other historians generally l-e.

It grieves me that I must close, for the subject is practically inexhaustible. However, for all of us, our hopes and desires have been realized. When we entered upon our career as the Class of 1907, Commencement Day—the day that will be long remembered by us all—seemed as far off as the North Pole. But now we have reached the desired goal, and are become the august and learned (?) graduated class. We have entered the ranks of the alumni of the old, honored School, our Alma Mater. And in our course it has ever been the idea of the class as a whole and of the fellows individually, to do everything for the honor and glory of the School, in the classroom and on the rostrum as well as on the athletic field.

We now move out of our old places and separate, some to go North, some South, and may it be to success, fame and fortune. We now assign our places to those who follow, and hope that they too may strive to bring honor to the School which they represent, and may even outstrip the Class of 1907 in their good work.

To our Head Master and to our instructors, to whose untiring efforts and singleness of purpose, we owe an unpayable debt of gratitude, we bid a fond, sad farewell; and we hope that it may be our good fortune in college and in later life to meet and to know men like them.

That the memory of our eventful days together may ever linger in the minds of the fellows of '07, and that they may rise to fame and honor, is the humble wish of their

HISTORIAN.

Class Poem

HOWARD EARLE TOMLINSON.

O Muse that oft in poets' ears
Hast breathed the tales of many years.
Thy fullest aid I now implore;
This one boon grant, I'll ask no more.

From old Penn Charter's learned walls,
From those familiar study-halls,
There sallies forth, each year in June,
A class forgotten all too soon;
A band of students ne'er returning
To still increase their store of learning.
A few there are who go straightway
To lead the toilsome life each day,
To venture forth upon the mart
Where commerce reigns in every heart.
Perchance the most elect to learn
Their art at college, where in turn
Another Alma Mater's care
For coming strife will each prepare.
And though the classes we precede

May seldom think, or ne'er indeed,
Of worthy ones who went before,
All will review, through memory's door,
The fleeting years of youth they spent
At William Penn's establishment.
This year we reach the parting ways,
Behind us leaving our school-days.
Then Muse, in song aid me bestow
One backward glance before we go.

A half a hundred strong we stand
With knowledge vast at our command.
The studies we've pursued these years
No doubt again will greet our ears.
The flowing French with each new verb
Did equanimity disturb;
The Gothic sounds of German tongue
That oft our wondering ears have stung.
No terror had the ancient Greek,
With tales which each of warriors speak,
While Latin claimed attention too;
Its classics all received their due.
The sound of English was a rest,
'Tis sure we understood it best.
Macaulay's essays we essayed,
And Milton's poems gravely weighed.
Then "Trig"—that unassuming word,

As well as "Solid" oft was heard.
From these a few considered "Plane"
A relaxation for the brain.
Such were the tasks that troubled us;
They held a sceptre tyrannous.
Yet pleasant memories surround
The building where such tasks abound.

The very pictures in the hall
In future years we may recall;
The stairways where the file would wait
Till appetite must needs abate.
And here the heaps of pastry rise,
The cynosure of famished eyes.
Then comes the gym, so quaintly built,
Embosomed high in banners gilt,
Where oft contend the rival hosts
And Blue or Yellow victory boasts.
While in the laboratory toiled,
As vapors rose and mixtures boiled,
The scientists of future time,
To fame and fortune bound to climb.
These scenes and many more we knew,
'Midst them our stock of wisdom grew.
No matter where we roam henceforth,
In sunny South or frigid North,
No matter how the years may pass,

We'll not forget '07's class.
And doubtless in some reverie,
Remembering in what company
We walked "the studious cloister's pale,"
To see our comrades we'll not fail.

For years awaited was the day
When we to school farewell should say.
The day has come; has passed so quick
We seem the victims of a trick.
This year we've striven hard to hold
The pace that others set of old;
In sports, in studies, this our quest—
To give to each our very best.
But now to classes that remain
And soon our station will attain,
To those who led each wandering mind
In paths where it might wisdom find,
To all of these we bid farewell.
We leave with feelings hard to tell,
Yet with the joy in every heart,
There is this hope, as we depart,—
That old Penn Charter's fame may grow
Each year; that from the school may go
Classes, increasing all the time,
To gain renown in many a clime

Class Prophecy

WILLIAM CAMPBELL, JR.

I am no longer that blithe youth you once called Bill. My hair is tinged with gray and I have lost some fifty pounds since last I left the iron gates of Penn Charter in the distance. I have just returned from a sojourn of two years on the Continent where I have been recuperating from a breakdown caused by overwork.

As I emerged from Broad Street Station, on returning to the scenes of my youth, I was accosted by an urchin, "Buy a North American, mister? It's all here and some of it's true" I handed him a copper, and on taking up the paper, my eye instantly fell on a cartoon, picturing a staid old senator trying to convince an assemblage that Irish potatoes should not be taxed. Underneath was inscribed:—"Bellak Again Wins—Drawn by Crothers."

To the right of this, in large headlines, I saw:

GALLAGHER NOW CONTROLS POLITICAL SITUATION—
GANG IS SUPREME

"After a long fight for decent government on the part of the city's best citizens under the able leadership of Peoples, the people's candidate, of, by, and for Peoples, the Organization came out victorious. Gallagher, who marshalled the Republican forces is now political dictator. His first move was to appoint as Director of Health, Dr. D. I. Fulton, who has lately won distinction by his discovery of the hitherto unsuspected presence of micro-organisms in Schuylkill River water."

Pleased to learn so much of fellows I had known in school, I glanced further. At the top of the next column was this:

BLOCH, THE GREAT CRIMINAL LAWYER, DECREED NOT GUILTY
JURY AGREES AFTER BEING OUT FIVE HOURS

"Judge Hunter asked for this verdict. Henly, Bloch's lawyer, had made such a clear case and had been so eloquent in his last speech, which we have printed at length on another page, that Dillon, the newly appointed District Attorney, was fairly swept off his feet. He nevertheless conducted his case in a masterly way and made use of every oratorical device to change the trend of affairs."

Further on, in the list of jurors, I saw "Levin, aged 49, retired merchant; Elwell, aged 47, Superintendent of the Aerial Surveying Company." Then came the following paragraph.

MEGARY ELECTED PRESIDENT OF PENN MUTUAL

"Mr. Howard D. Megary, who has ever been influential in the company, was to-day given the high position of president owing to the death of the former incumbent. His place as general manager will in all probability be occupied by Mr. Sam Parke, assistant cashier. Mr. Megary resides in Glenwynd whence he comes to business in his palatial airship every morning. He is married and has five children, one of whom is president of his class at Penn Charter, where his father graduated some thirty years ago."

Turning to the society column, my eye was attracted by the picture of a charming young lady, "Miss Marguerite Wolbert, daughter of George S. Wolbert, head of Bryn Mawr, who to-morrow becomes the bride of William Holloway, Jr., Mr. Holloway, Sr., has long been associated with Mr. G. R. Williams in the manufacture of the well-known electric razors, with which lathering is unnecessary."

Further down on the same page: "Mr. and Mrs. Henderer, well known in the upper set, accompanied by their daughter, sail for the continent on the four-day airship "Hi-fi." Among the other passengers are Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill."

There was on the next page a short article headed:

DIEHL, MAKES ANOTHER DISCOVERY

"On his last expedition to the Antarctic regions, Diehl, the well-known explorer and botanist, discovered a new passage to the Pole which he located on his trip five years ago. He proposes to establish a colony there for people suffering from brainstorm."

On the editorial page, I noticed that Ballard had become editor-in-chief. That explained why the North American was playing an important part in politics just then.

Under the editorials appeared the following: "Esperanto, the international language has been adopted at Oshkosh University. The recent appointment of Dr. Macfarlan to the chair of Esperanto at Oshkosh University is quite an innovation. The invention and perfection of this universal tongue had interested him ever since he struggled with Latin and French verbs in prep. school. Realizing how wearisome is the task of acquiring the various languages in the old curricula, he resolved to devote his life to relieving the rising generation from this great incubus. We congratulate the University and Mr. Macfarlan. When he shuffles off this mortal coil, may his eulogy be spoken and printed in the tongue known and read of all men."

For some reason I glanced at the book review. I was somewhat surprised at what met my eye:

THE DEMON'S DREAM—By CUTHBERT LEE.

"Mr. Lee's latest work is characteristic in many ways. In the introduction he states that the plot of the story is based on a dream he had after a day at Penn Charter, the characters being drawn from his early recollections. Among them, he says, were such persons as Mills, its hero, now teaching plain geometry at the Holman-Brooks School."

"Another volume which is worthy of mention is that by Professors Fallon and Meyer. It is a treatise on "The Value of H₂O as a Preventative of the Adhesion of Extraneous Matter to the Cuticle in the Species Gentes Hominum." The work is very elucidating and the subject is well worthy of the comprehensive treatment which these two eminent chemists have given it."

"We have had the pleasure of inspecting a forthcoming volume of poems by Mr. Tomlinson. The title of the book is "Poeta nascitur non fit." Perhaps we should explain that this does not imply that the verses are "not fit." to be read in good society. On the contrary, they have a high esthetic value. If we should presume to make any criticism of this work, we should say that at times the author's imagination soars so high, that it is really painful to get down to the prose of life."

On the page devoted to church news I saw several familiar names:

"The Rev. Dr. Janvier, the newly appointed pastor of the First Church, to-morrow preaches on "The Relationship between the Workingman and the Church." His evening subject is "The Workingman and the Saloon."

"Reverend Dr. Haupt of Boston, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at the Pennsylvania Co-Ed College to-morrow, owing to the absence of Dr. Wadsworth whose wife is seriously ill in Kalamazoo."

On the opposite page were the ads of all the theatres, some fifty or sixty of them now. At the "Pennyette," the attraction for the week was:

THE HUMAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, THE WONDER OF ALL AGES

"Answers your questions before you ask them, Be sure and see him. The only Lance B. Lathem. Don't be mislead by imitators. Here is the genuine."

"Well, has he got to this," thought I, when I noticed, in even larger type:

THE ACROBAT'S LAST ACT.

"Mr. Schaum presents Mr. Perkins in T. A. Budd's latest skit, which ran six weeks in Hoboken, and twenty miles from a howling audience in New York."

The entire next page was taken by the advertisement of a new store which boasted the name—The Kent-Keay-Koncern. Among the ads on the next page was that of the Irish Company, Coal Dealers. The two cousins were captains of industry, for they had control of the coal market in Pennsylvania. Then came:

HOW TO ACQUIRE BEAUTY BY WIRELESS TELEPHONE.

"Call up Dr. Cheyney, the Beauty Specialist, for full information. Prestioga 23-4-U." Then I saw that the advertising jingle was still in fashion, for this followed:

"Mary had a little lamb,
She followed it one day;
And so that knowing little sheep
To Hughes' shop led the way.

Hughes, Headquarters for Fancy Fruit and Produce at all Seasons."
On the sporting news page, Ogden's name stared me in the face. I read:

ATHLETICS ARE SURE OF THE PENNANT

"This is due to the discovery by Manager Flagg of a rattling good twirler, named Ogden. He has proved a wonder. Twice this season has he shown the fans that it is possible to strike out every man with eighty-one pitched balls. His skill in wielding the bat has in all brought the champions 150 runs during the season."

On the same page I noticed the report of the Olympic Games held this year in the stadium at Queen Lane—"Nichols was the winner of the 100 centimeter dash. Watkin had no competitors in the weight events, as Hercules would not return from the Elysian Fields to defend his laurels. Phillips succeeded in clearing three metres in the high jump, but the record was not allowed, as one of his shoe-laces came untied as he jumped. There was an innovation of a fat man's race. Rothschild upheld America in this and defeated the German contestant by two millimeters."

On the last page was quite a little of interest. I have saved a few items.

"The recital by Professor Clark at Silverspoon Hall last evening, was heard by a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Clark, the noted violinist, has been abroad studying for several years, and this was his first public appearance since his return."

HARVARD'S NEW PRESIDENT

HON. KENNETH KNAPP ACCEPTS DISTINGUISHED POSITION.

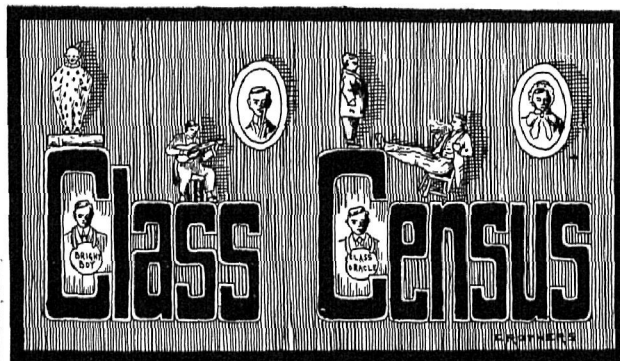

"Mr. Knapp, who has recently occupied the chair of Psychical Research at Harvard, has been chosen as president of that institution. Mr. Knapp has had a most remarkable career. From his training school he graduated with a rank of 9.99 and at the University of Pennsylvania, he had, and still has, the honor of being the only scholar who never flunked a recitation. Since that time he has been engaged in educational work, so that his appointment is not only a credit to himself, but reflects well the sagacity of those who chose him."

CURIOUS ACCIDENT AT PALM BEACH.

"An automobile driven by C. C. Van Roden and owned by Frederick H. Bassett, who occupied the tonneau, collided with a large touring-car driven by Brooke Dunwoody, the financier. In the latter machine were George W. Mixter and Paul Dana, well-known society men of this city. When the two parties succeeded in placing their pedal extremities in a proper relative position, it looked as though a quarrel might ensue. But the men recognized each other as former class-mates and went off happily together."

A gust of wind tore the paper from my hand, and looking up, I found that, absorbed in my reading, I had wandered down to the Waldorf Stratford, Philadelphia's newest hotel "The Class of 1907 has done pretty well," thought I, and with that I aimed for the cafe, for it was past my usual hour of dining.

Class Census

Who has done the most for the class? Ogden. He wore his Lansdowne vest and Chester socks. The combination was too much for us.

Who is the best known? Campbell gave Holloway a hard tussle, but the latter won out. The victor's laugh was his chief asset.

Who thinks that he is the handsomest? Cheyney left Megary and a large field at the post.

Who is the best butter in? Bloch. Wolbert second, with two votes.

Who is the best bluffer? Knapp and Tomlinson were both nominated, but Flegg won on his German translations.

Who is the best politician? Peoples, though Bellak and Megary were nominated.

Who is the strongest? Lathem—but keep your eye on Watkin.

Who has the largest feet? Mills ought to have from the noise they make, but Tomlinson won.

Who is the most careless? The decision was unanimously awarded to Knapp.

Who is the freshest? Elwell's brilliant "asides" in math. recitations carried the day.

Who has the most conspicuous hair? Bloch's curls entitled him to enter, but Hunter's auburn locks took the lead and were never headed.

Who is the ladies' man? There was, of course, great rivalry for this, and the vote resulted as follows: Peoples, 12; Macfarlan, 8; Bellak, 4; Crothers, 3; Keay and Ogden each, 2; and Megary, 1.

Who is the sportiest? Flagg's plaid socks won in a walk.

Who tries to be? Macfarlan won, although Wolbert succeeded in getting eight votes.

Who is the jolliest? Meyer tried hard to wrest the motley laurels from Campbell, but failed dismally.

Who is the tallest? A dispute arose between Clark and Wadsworth for this event, so they agreed to share the honors.

Who is the shortest? Someone tried to stuff the ballot box, so the vote was declared void. (Mills seemed to be a favorite).

Who is the fattest? There were four entries—Fulton, Lathem, Rothschild, and Campbell. They finished in the order named.

Who is the thinnest? Nothing daunted by their defeat in the previous event, both Campbell and Rothschild entered, the former winning by a single vote.

Who never argues? Fallon seems to have lost his reputation, for Bassett's math. "spiels" beat him by two votes.

Who always argues? While Bellak and Haupt were wrangling, Macfarlan took the lead amid great applause.

Who is the brightest? Peoples had little competition, Knapp declining to run.

Who rough-houses most? Mills was thought to have this cinched, but Ogden proved to be our pride.

Who is the best behaved? Many aspired to this distinction; Holloway winning with thirteen votes.

Who eats the most? Watkin challenged all comers—and none came.

What is your favorite drink? Peruna.

What is your favorite food? . . . P. C. penny sinkers followed by plenty of indigestion tablets

What is your favorite smoke? Bull Durham.

What was the greatest achievement in your course? Making "Spitz" sneeze.

Who is your favorite preacher? Mr. Walenta.

Who is the best musician?Rothschild.

Who is your favorite actress? Evelyn Nesbit.

Who is the best athlete? Lathem as the strongest was also awarded this honor.

Who is the biggest flirt?Megary only got one vote for ladies' man, but he had no difficulty in winning this.

Who is the class doll?Lee, with his bisque complexion and well rounded figure.

JOSEPH FAUSSETT BELLAK.

The time has come. This is graduation night. The first great act in the drama of our lives is drawing to a close. But ere we pass on to the stage of Man's estate let us pause, and consider for a brief moment, the several and glorious scenes enacted during our school days at old Penn Charter. A flood of reminiscences float back upon us. How well we remember when four years or more separated us from this longed for night. Yes, how we longed for it with the full force of boyish desire. But "distance lent enchantment to the view," for now that it is arrived we linger affectionately on the familiar scenes and places, which time can never efface from our minds.

Day after day we have assembled together, and the associations which cluster around the old school, more vivid to-night than ever before, can never be forgotten.

We cannot take leave of her familiar walls and sunder the pleasant ties which have bound us together without acknowledging the debt of gratitude we owe our Alma Mater.

When the curtain rises to-morrow on our new life, where shall we be?

Shall we stick together? Impossible! For we shall be scattered in different lands. Business will claim some. Different universities others. The bond to-night must be broken. Shall we be successful? Who can say? Some may meet disasters and be capsized. Few we pray. Others will sail gloriously with full sail into the harbor of prosperity. Whatever may be our destiny we shall always hold the remembrance of our boyhood days at Penn Charter uppermost in our minds, and the lessons taught by her shall serve as a guide to direct our steps when they falter.

Old Penn Charter, our never-to-be-forgotten Alma Mater! You have given to us the best in you, we will try to give our best to the world.

Others will fight your battles, others will hold our places of seniority within your walls, others will carry your colors to success, others will win literary honors for you, Dear Old School, others will make the community respect your moral and scholastic standing, but we shall never forget our share in these, your glories, and you, Old Penn Charter, will be supreme in our hearts when we become men, as you were supreme in our boyhood affections. We must leave all these tender associations and in parting we bid you an affectionate farewell.

To our Head Master, who for more than a generation, has led the old School, with superb generalship to its present splendid position, we say farewell. The most helpful study to school boys is the study of individual lives. In them they find the great lessons of inspiration. You have always been the magnet that has drawn us to the paths of educational and moral excellence. You have not been a mere head of the school. Not one of us but feels that in you we have had a friend and adviser, whose interest in our highest welfare was deep and vital. We, your sons of the class of 1907, have gathered here to-day, filled with joy and pride at being able to do you honor. It is not necessary to voice your merits, they have already been proclaimed far and wide by this great school. You have devoted yourself to years of arduous toil, and your efforts have been crowned with success. We leave with no higher hope than that you may long continue to guide and lead this, our school. Farewell.

Honorable Faculty: It is not mere compliance with custom that in behalf of our class I tender you our most sincere gratitude for your helpful and sympathetic relations with us in the years now closing. To you has been given the task of impressing directly upon our minds those truths that shall be the most useful to us in after life and shall develop our best manhood. No matter how inattentive and stupid we may have been, you have always persevered and have with patience and scholarship laid the broad foundations for us to build upon. How well you have discharged your responsibilities, the present but faintly shows, but when the future shall bring its triumphs, as we sincerely hope it may, we shall call to mind your faces, and reflect that by your wisdom and instruction that success was made possible. To-day we cannot repay you. May our future be your reward. We bid you an affectionate farewell.

Nor would we forget to remember our athletic coaches at this time:—Men who have stood for purity in athletics, for a sound body as well as a sound mind; men who out of raw material, mere boys, have made us a factor in the athletic world. Gentlemen, we bid you farewell.

Fellow classmates: In every tongue, in every dialect, there is one word which brings its shadow to the brightest scene, that word to give utterance to which we have assembled here to-night, that “sad, sweet word—farewell.” We breathe it tenderly, we breathe it earnestly, for it bears in its accent both a blessing and a prayer. To-night we are closer together than ever before and here pledge ourselves most solemnly never to forget the good old days we spent together at 8 South 12th Street. We are now about to part, possibly forever, may it not be so.

Our number has already been decreased by the Death Angel and our remembrances go out to that dear friend who would have graduated with us to-night and our sympathies to his bereaved parents.

For the rest of us, though separated in body, may we be joined in spirit, and may our motto be—“The Class of 1907 till death doth us part.” God bless you and farewell.

Prize Oration

THE POWER OF IDEAS.

WILLIAM LEVENGOOD HAUPT.

Man is an intellectual being. Although he sustains a close and intimate relation with the lower orders of life, and is bound to them by his physical constitution, yet because he is endowed with mind and reason, the power and possibilities of which are well nigh infinite, he stands as the end and completion of all that went before him—the crown and glory of creation.

Enthroned in this realm of the mind, he lives in two worlds at the same time,—the objective world without and the subjective world within, the world of matter and the world of ideas. It is this that interprets nature, and gives to it its meaning, its use and its worth. The world of matter would be a vast desert, a boundless waste, but for the world of ideas. Thought is the creator; it is that which has turned forests into gardens, made a pathway of the seas, and transformed the earth for man's abode. This mastery of man over nature is an inspiring truth. By the might of his intellect, he not only brings the beasts of the field under his control, and makes them his obedient servants, but even the very elements are made submissive to his will. That most subtle and terrible of all the natural forces, the lightning, he turns aside or garners up; the rivers toil in his workshop; the tides of the ocean bear his burdens; the hurricane rages for his use and profit.

Ideas have moulded racial progress no less than they moulded nature. Along the whole line of development, from man barbarous to man civilized, from man nearest the brute to man nearest the divine, the advance has been carried onward and upward only by the power of ideas. The developing idea of manhood has lifted whole tribes out of brute degradation, and placed them upon a higher plane. The idea of chivalry shone out the sole star in the night of feudalism and vandalism. It was the idea of liberty that wrested the Magna Charta from England's tyrant king, freed America from England's oppressive rule, gave birth to our republican institutions, and made them the object of longing hope to the burdened and oppressed of all nations. It was the idea of personal freedom that struck the shackles of slavery from millions in bondage. Well has Wendell Phillips said, "Ideas strangle statutes; they go booming through the world louder than cannon; thoughts are mightier than armies." The idea of duty and right has been sealed with the blood of heroes on every page of history—on the silent, unwritten pages, as well as on those blazoned with noble names and lofty deeds.

But not only does this power of ideas make itself felt in the progress of history, as a whole; we also find it in the individual life of every nation. A nation without an idea is a nation without permanence or power. Discover the ideas that govern the life of a nation, and you may read that nation's history and predict its destiny. When Sparta's idea was physical manhood, she produced the most perfect physiques the world has ever seen. When Athen's idea was art and philosophy, she produced the greatest sculptors and philosophers of all time. When Rome's idea was empire, her sway was extended over the known world; but when that idea degenerated to mere lust, the strong arm of her power was palsied. England's idea of conquest and commerce has made her the mistress of the seas, the ruler of vast territories, the factory of the world. Our own republic, whose idea is internal development and independence forever, has developed rapidly along the lines of peace and prosperity, and has become the world's storehouse, the assimilator of races, the asylum for the needy and oppressed of all lands.

But nowhere does the power of ideas shine forth more conspicuously than in the life of the individual. The world's thought is the product of a few master minds. Men make nations, and you reach the root of power not in the mass but in the individual. A new idea emanates from the brain of some God-sent genius and becomes a torch to light the world for ages. Says Chapin:—"Events are only the shells of ideas. And often it is the fluent thought of ages that is crystallized in a moment by the stroke of a pen or the point of a bayonet." These great men are they who seized the right moment to crystallize the idea into the event. Read, then, the power of ideas as we find it in the lives of these giants who rise above the masses as the mountain peaks above the plain. Consider Moses, the lawgiver; Socrates, the philosopher; Alexander, the conqueror; Shakespeare, the poet; Columbus, the discoverer; and Edison, the electrician, and then reflect how much of the world's history is bound up in the names of these men and in the ideas for which they stand.

Ideas have written all the books, founded all the philosophies, invented all the arts and humanities, and perfected all the sciences since the world began. The mute eloquence of the past and the conclusive evidence of the present proclaim it. Mind with soul has made man a little lower than the angels—the kingliest creature of God's universe.

GYMNASIUM TEAM, 1907

Athletic History of the Class of 1907

EVERETT LEONARD KENT.

It is with much pleasure that we enter upon this brief review, as we consider what '07 has contributed to the success of its Alma Mater in athletics during the last two or three years. True it is that several of the most promising men were forced to lower their colors and ingloriously enroll in the membership of under-classes. Since this history is, as most histories are, of successful men, of men who stuck to the class as well as the school, we pass by those who sacrificed the honor of membership in the Class of 1907, and deal exclusively with the recipients of the "sheepskin."

To begin with, our football teams of the last two seasons, and the 1906 team in particular, have been two of the finest to uphold the school on the gridiron.

The representatives of the class on the 1905 team were Rothschild, center; Campbell, tackle; and Hunter, half-back. All three played a strong game, and bid fair to be a power for 1906. The team passed through a successful season and won the I. A. A. A. championship.

On the champion team of 1906 we were represented by seven of the thirteen men to make it. This team did not start off very auspiciously, but soon found its true strength, and by the end of the season was as strong as any that have worn the Blue and Yellow in the past. Rothschild, center; Peoples and Watkin, guard; and Campbell, tackle, constituted a quartette of formidable line men. Hunter, who had been shifted from half-back to end, played a strong game, and showed marked improvement over the previous year. Levin got in many of the games at end also, and won his P. C. Ogden did great work at half-back, especially in his place-kicking and open-field play.

What has been said of the football teams, may also be said with absolute truth of the baseball teams. For many, many years Penn Charter had been traditionally in the rut as regards baseball, and every year turned out a team which was unable to capture the championship. The 1906 team, captained by Ogden, shook off this lethargy, rose in its might, and conquered. The members of the class to accomplish this feat were: Ogden, Hunter, Kent Williams and Flagg.

But the 1907 team proved even better. This is probably the strongest which ever had the honor to represent Penn Charter. This team has a strong claim on the school championship of Philadelphia, and is tied in the I. A. A. A., for first place. The class was upheld in this by: Hunter, captain and catcher; Ogden, pitcher and first-base; Flagg, first-base and pitcher; Kent, second-base; and Williams, left-field, with Rothschild as utility man. Special mention is due Ogden and Hunter, the star battery who worked together for three years, and who had proved the mainstay of the team: Holloway was the manager of the 1907 baseball team.

In cricket, Holloway was a member of the 1904 team which, for the first time since 1893, achieved a notable triumph by winning the Inter-Academic championship, and ending the season without a defeat. Of the 1906 cricket team, W. L. Irish and Levin were members, and the former was manager. In 1907, Ogden, Campbell, Levin, Henly, Mixter, Clark and W. L. Irish were members, with Clark as manager.

The weakness of the class was formerly without doubt the inability to produce successful track material. Of the whole class, but one member made the track team in 1906. This was Keay, who took third place in the 440 yards run at the Inter-Academic track meet. Perhaps it was the realization of our responsibility as the senior class, that caused improvement. At any rate, on the 1907 team we find Dillon, Fulton, Keay, Levin, Nichols, Ogden, O'Neill, Parke and van Roden. O'Neill won the mile run, Parke the half mile run, and Keay the broad jump, at the Inter-Academic Meet. Megary was the manager of the track team in 1907.

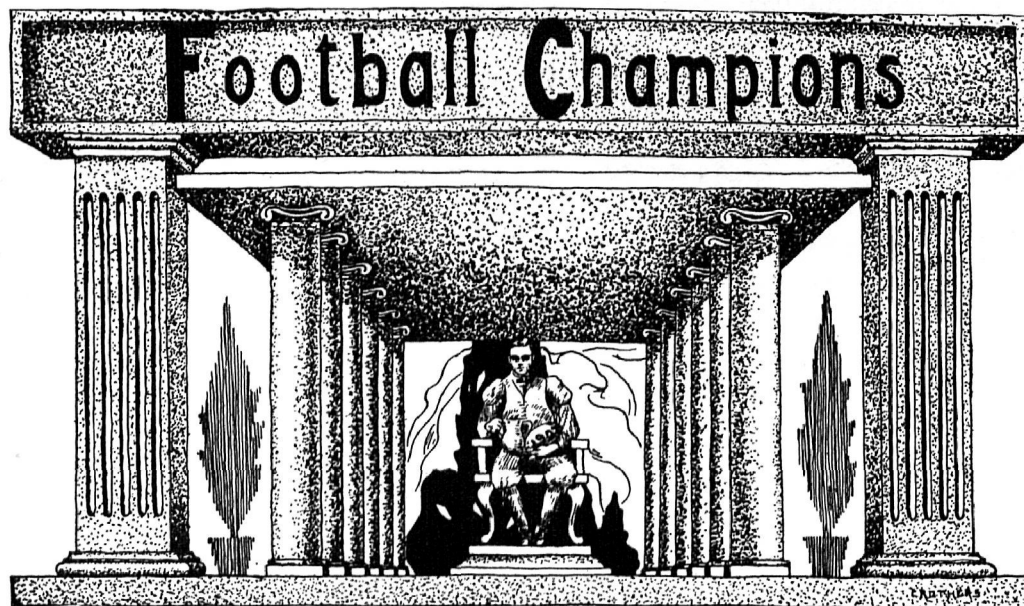

In cross-country the school has never been especially strong, although it has turned out some good individual runners. R. Irish was a member of the 1903 team and captained the 1904 team, of which Parke and Bellak were members. In 1905, Bellak, Kent, and Mills were on the team; and in 1906, Macfarlan, Nichols and O'Neill.

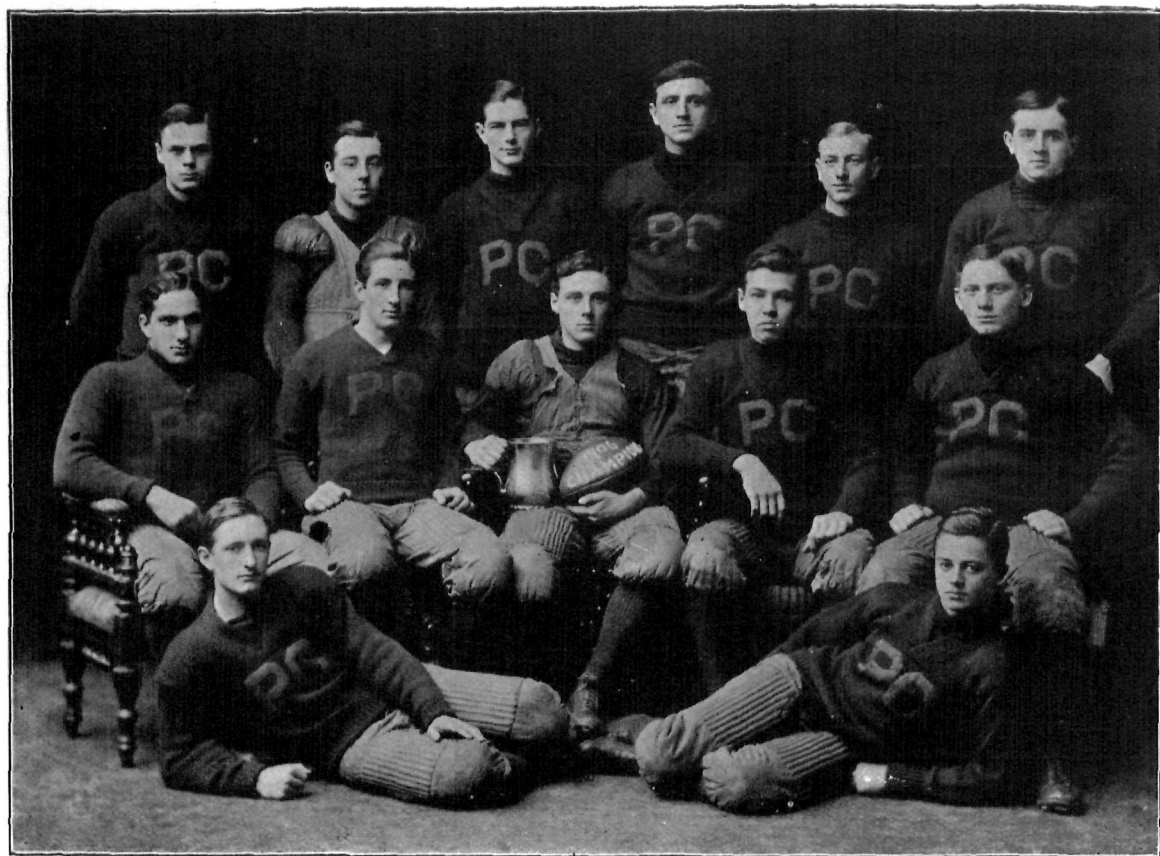

At the 1905 school entertainment, Ogden and Fulton were members of the gymnasium team which performed in the high-shoot and high-jump. In 1906, van Roden, Wadsworth, O'Neill, Perkins, and Kent were members; and on the gym team of 1907, we find Dana, Dillon, Fulton, Keay, Kent, Knapp, Mills, Phillips, Ogden and Wadsworth.

In the strength tests of 1907, there were twenty-four members of the class to make the Strength List, and seven to pass the eight hundred (kilograms) mark.

As our object in this history has been to prove the strength of the Class of 1907 in athletics, so by summing up the different records just set forth, it is evident that the influence of the class is deeply felt and it is modestly expressed when we say that the school will feel the loss by its graduation. On the other hand, we may say also, that among the many members of the class who have won their P. C., there is not one who does not feel a deep regret that he will be unable to present his services to the school in the future.

Literary Record of the Class of 1907

CLIFFORD BATEMAN BALLARD

It is but natural that the graduating class of an institution like Penn Charter should exert a strong influence upon the literary and athletic activities which interest the members of the school. Also, it is but natural that a senior class which is as talented, as well provided with budding geniuses as is the Class of 1907, should play an important part for several years in the literary history of the school.

If we accept the adage "The pen is mightier than the sword," we find our own athletic record fading into insignificance when compared with our literary achievements as a class. Yet we should not boast unduly of either series of triumphs, rather state them briefly and unembellished by enthusiastic comments.

As far back as Quinta there appeared in embryonic state some of our geniuses. Anyone who glances over the school magazine for 1902, will see, as editors of the "Quinta Monthly," many familiar names. Dunwoody was editor-in-chief and associated with him were Keay, Perkins and van Roden. While still in the lower school we were always well represented in the Junior Page of the magazine. Henly, Diehl, Dillon, Watkin were contributors. It was in the Junior Page that two of the magazine editors had their first experience.

Ballard was the first to be admitted on the school magazine staff. The next year, Tomlinson and Irish followed, Irish at first being a business manager. Lee has been one of the most faithful contributors to the pages of the magazine, while Cheyney has interested his readers with accounts of school life in Germany. Tomlinson shares with Warren Irish the honors in producing verse.

In debating we cannot boast of having secured the championship, but one of our class was on last year's championship team, Bellak, who was captain of the team this year. Haupt and Meyer were the other members, with Henly as alternate. Lee captained the second team and by so doing the first to have his name emblazoned on the "In Memoriam" tablet which the Literary Society has hung in the Assembly Room to encourage the second team fellows who previously had received all the knocks and no share of glory. If the tablet had been hung last year, Bellak, Ballard, Diehl, Lee and Bloch would all have secured fame, through it.

Among the clubs we have shone—nor is this an egotistical statement, for consider the following facts.

The president of the Literary Society, during our last year, was Hurter, the vice-president was Megary, and the editor, Diehl. On the various committees were Kent, Mills, Dana, Tomlinson and Wadsworth. A number of our fellows took part in the annual production of the Society, the "Deestrick Skule." All the principal rôles were played by members of '07.

In the Science Club, Perkins was president, Tomlinson vice-president, Lee secretary, Wadsworth editor—and Warren Irish chairman of the committee in charge of the club's annual photographic exhibition.

In the school there was organized a new club this year under Mr. Alder's direction, namely the Deutscher Verein. We find that '07 was well represented in its offices—six out of eight being held by members of our class. Warren Irish was president, Meyer vice-president, and continuing in the unintelligible style of the club, Diehl, Schriftführer; Peoples, Kassierer; Ballard, Redakteur; and Megary on the Vergnügungs-Komitee.

A goodly-sized number of the members of '07 were in the Musical Clubs, and "Jeff" Clark was the leader of the newly-organized orchestra which did such good service.

In the prize-speaking at the school entertainment Megary and Bellak represented '07, and Bellak won. In the speaking at commencement, Haupt won, the other speakers being Knapp, Diehl, Hughes, Megary and Tomlinson. And this was this last page of our literary history; may it be as pleasant to contemplate, in college.
